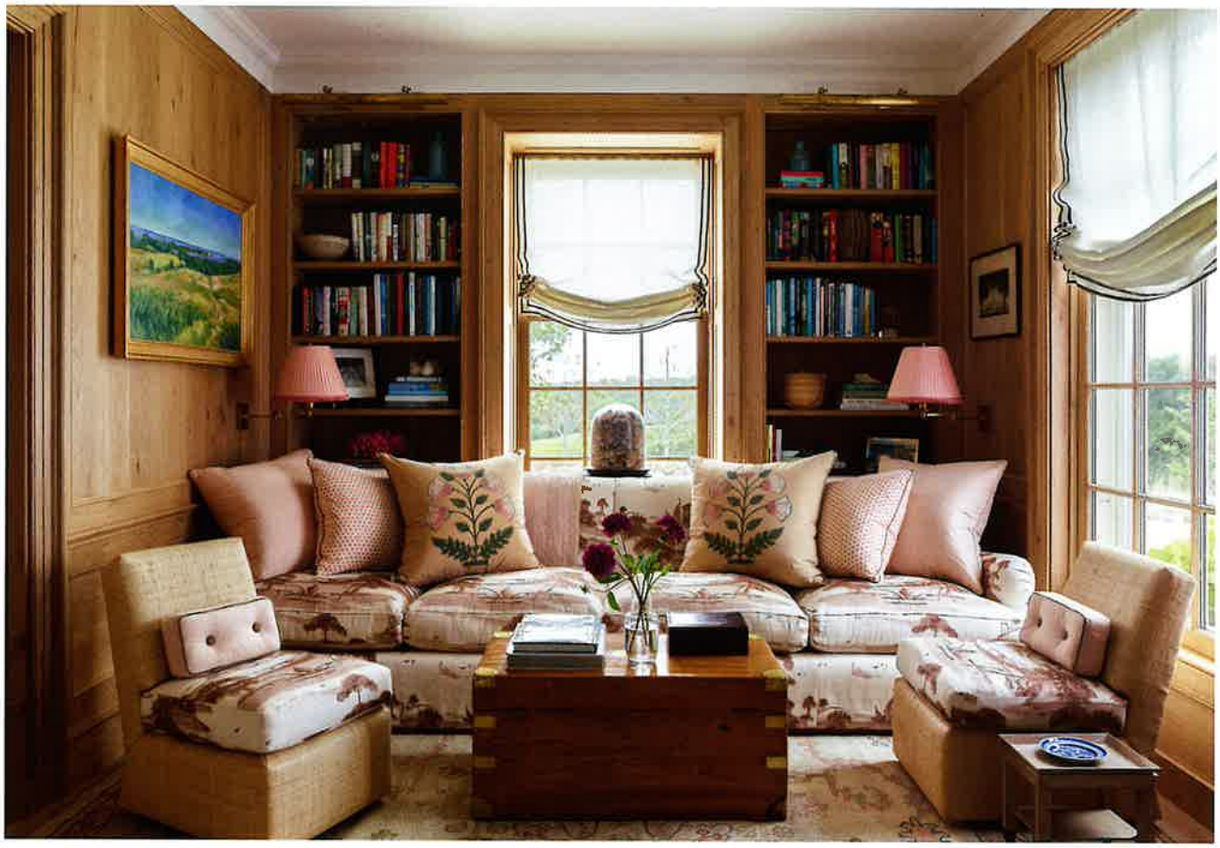
SALTY SALUTE

Miles Redd and Gil Schafer reimagine a 19th-century farm for a family of six, prioritizing sunlight and salt air, and preserving a beloved landmark of summers past.

ABOVE A cedar-shingled farmhouse overlooking Great Salt Pond honors New England simplicity and Block Island's sense of community. Architecture by Schafer and design by Redd reenvisioned the 16-acre property for a Florida family who have summered there for decades.

RIGHT "Everything was about creating connections to the view and indoor/outdoor living," says Schafer, who maximized glass doors and windows opening to the waterfront, and bathed walls in a soft conch-shell pink.



LEFT "They're an active family, out and about on the land, on the water," but the home's numerous nooks and communal spaces, like this comfy library, "are generous, for the idea of gathering," says Redd.

LEFT Shades of sea and sky blue in the lacquer-and-brass lighting and the custom-marbled hallway mirror reinforce the outdoor connection.

RIGHT Sunshine and big views are this roomy kitchen's main ingredients. The island's pippy oak countertop gives an earthy contrast to the white marble elsewhere.

LEFT Sunny yellows and ocean blues summon bright beach days ahead when waking up in this cheerful guest bedroom.

RIGHT Over the garage, a guest suite with private balcony is anchored by a custom lemony linen sofa.

RIGHT Painted grass cloth walls "give texture but feel beachy and old-fashioned, like they've always been there," says Redd of the primary bedroom. Vintage florals and a painted desk add to the yesteryear softness.
